

From The President

Dear Members,
Hope everyone is in good health and making art.

We have just finished our Annual Citation Show 2008 at the Art Centre of Plano. It was a wonderful exhibition chosen by John Lambert Marcucci, Ph.D. Many thanks to Gisa Elwazir, show chair, Marie Renfro, co- chair, Candy Howard - fundraising, David Blow - catalog, John Voelker, Constance Hargis and especially to our donors who make the awards possible.

This year's show was extra special as TVAA recognized John Voelker as a Honorary Life Member. John has been volunteering with TVAA for almost 50 years, which is an admirable dedication to the organization. Thank you! John we look forward to many more years of you support. (See Artist Profile in newsletter)

The Holidays are approaching TVAA's Annual Christmas Party hosted by Liz Netherland. This year we will be introducing Artist Trading Cards as an activity. Please mark your calendar for a fun and festive occasion.

Happy Holidays. Be safe and enjoy your time with family and friends.

Brenda McKinney
TVAA President

Artist Trading Cards

Artist Trading Cards, (ATCs), were founded by M. Vanci Stirnemann. He thought of the idea for ATCs at the 1988 Olympics in Calgary, Canada, while attending a hockey trading card session there. At that session he became intrigued by what was happening during the card trades and wanted to explore it further. Over the next few years and together with Calgary artist Don Mabie, (aka Chuck Steak), Artist Trading Cards became a regular occurrence in Calgary and other parts of the world. Every year in Calgary there is an anniversary trading card session and party, and people come from all over the world to trade their cards.

Artist Trading Cards is a collaborative performance and is basically a trade of cards between two people. The cards traded are made by hand by the people doing the trading. They measure 3 1/2" x 2 1/2", (basically the size of a baseball or hockey card). Various methods are employed in the making of the cards such as painting, drawing, sewing, writing, collage, as well as many others. The cards are signed and dated by the maker. This collaboration is an inclusive one and involves people from all walks of life, (not only artists).

Some years ago, Artist Trading Cards went through more changes after their introduction on the Internet. Some of these changes included the selling of cards online, kits for making ATCs, as well as others. Like anything else, change for Artist Trading Cards was inevitable.

My interest in Artist Trading Cards lies in the making of the cards and the person-to-person trading of these cards. I have met many different people whom I may never have met otherwise. Some have become good friends over the years. — Dorothy Clarke

Don't get Scammed

The Scam

The Purchase Offer scam ALWAYS involves that the artist receive more money than the artwork is worth and the transfer of excess money from the artist to the scammer.

The Plot

The artist receives an email with commonly a very short offer to purchase several works of art, usually from someone from out of your country (but not always). The artwork are indicated by name and the email requests a total "without shipping". The seemingly very professional collector, gallery or person who is newly remodeling their home offers to pay with a money order. Often the first email ends there and you simply submit your total.

Next will come an email that will indicate that you will receive the money order as soon as you give your address and the "shipping company" will contact you to make arrangements to ship the artwork. Somewhere in the email it is hinted or said outright that the money order will be for your artwork plus shipping and your help is needed to arrange the payment to the shipping company, usually but not always by cashier's check or money gram or western union transfer. Once this transfer happens the shipping company will pick up the works.

The Scam

You receive a money order which will eventually (can take up to two weeks to bounce) not clear your bank. Your very sound money is transferred to a non-existent shipping company (the scammer) and you are out money. The shipping company never shows up to pick up the works, or if they do you are out the money and the art.

TVAA CITATION 2008 JURIED ART SHOW HIGHLIGHTS

Show chair: Gisa Elwazir.
Co-Chair: Marie Renfro
Juror: John Lambert Marcucci Ph.D., Director and founding member of Haley-Henman Gallery LAC, a contemporary, modern art gallery.

The depth and breadth of the TVAA member's submitted work for the Citation 2008 exhibition was indeed an outstanding collection from which to make selections. I congratulate all who participated in this process. The final selections are the result of first visiting your work by photographic slide images and then viewing the installed juried selections. I thank you for this exceptional opportunity to view your work. I particularly enjoyed giving the works their time to communicate with me and with each other. So in this sense, I made the first selections based on the criterion of creative vision, or how the works spoke to me, and how it related to the representation of the entire collection. The selection of awards, followed the same process, but with an appreciation of media, technique, and innovation. Although the and innovative in her use of the painted frame that conceptually facilitates our entry into the story.

I sincerely thank the Art Centre of Plano for its excellent curatorship and the support of the TVAA members. Congratulations to all the participating artists in Citation 2008. Thank you for the honor and enjoyment to play a part in this worthy show.

John Volker Honored

At this year's Citation show we were proud to present artist John Volker with a lifetime membership. John has been a member of the TVAA since 1963. Volker has served as president, vice-president, board member, and continues to support our initiatives through hours of volunteer work. Here are excerpts from a spotlight written by Liz Netherland.

So many people know and love John Volker. When you think of him you think, "what a man!" John is dependable, helpful, calm, neat and interested in everything. Reflecting his life and personality, his work is also neat methodical and well organized. Working on paper, he lays in his design with black and white, and then colors it in. He starts with either lithograph line or pen and ink and completes the composition with his favorite tool: colored pencil. Like John's lanky, long-limbed silhouette, at a distance his work is always recognizable. Although his work has changed and grown, one will always see a controlled and organized style, compositionally interesting and balanced.

Volker also does beautiful collages, which reflect some of his other interests: theatre, music, and movies. His education and experience can also be recognized in his work, having received his education in commercial graphics capacities.

When asked how long he had been doing art, Volker laughed and said, "Since my mamma handed me some crayons to keep me busy while she milked the cow." When he left his home in Pike County, Ohio, he went to Columbus College of Art and Design and proceeded to freelance for various firms and worked for WBNS-TV in Columbus. The cover of the magazine Art Direction attracted his attention. He saw that it was created by a man named Harry Traywick, art director of a packaging company in Dallas, John sent him his portfolio and Traywick said, "come on down." Since then, John has done work for Neiman Marcus, WFAA-TV, The Drawing Board, Susan Crane Packaging and Computer Language Research.

John has won awards for his work locally and nationally. He continues to do good art and help everybody. When asked whether he would rather be doing something else, he replies, "No, I'm on a roll and I don't want to stop." We say, "Good, John. Keep on doing what you're doing; we like what you do and who you are."

jury selection highlights individual works, I would emphasize the collection importance because the combined synergy of your works make the individual works shine and excel even more.

Susan Afrasiabian's "Us" opens a world of colorful bonds between a horse and a woman, that perhaps are not obvious at first, but develop out of layers of transparent realities. Her mastery of the oil medium gives the work its vitality.

Ester Ritz's "It's Not Easy Being Red" is very easy to enjoy for its exuberance, composition and fantasy. It's wonderful chameleon qualities allow thoughts and images to appear during one visit and then new ones during the next _ reflecting the viewers red aura.

Gisa Elwazir's "Stepping Into Noah's Ark" compels the viewer to enter a world of symbolic images and weave their own story of rescue from the flood. She is a master of her medium, gouache,
